This tree was blazed by Charles Winnecke during the Horn Expedition of 1894. The expedition was the first primarily scientific expedition to study the natural history of Central Australia. The area studied included country of the Arrernte and Luritja people. Documented literature suggests the tree is located near Bagot Creek, toward the southern boundary of the National Park.

It is unknown if tree still stands. The last photo was taken in 1989.
